Catalog Description –

This course explores the connections between the discovery of new materials -- such as ceramics, concrete, precious stones and metals, glass, steel, plastics and semiconductors - - and social transformations worldwide. To see these connections, the course will fuse basic concepts in materials science and engineering with perspectives and methods from anthropology, history, English, classics, and sociology. From ancient cities and Roman baths, to steel foundries and Tupperware parties, to virtual communities and nanomedicine, we will learn how the physical properties of different materials intersect with cultural variables like gender, race, power/authority, religious beliefs, values, and financial and political systems to shape human civilization. By connecting lessons from the past to the inventions of cutting-edge materials, we will also explore the future social impacts of new materials in medicine, construction, transportation, clean energy, sports, and other areas. Engineers play important roles in changing or maintaining the structure and fabric of society. This course will explore how their materials-based technologies shape our society, as well as how society shapes engineering innovations.

Prerequisites and Co-requisites - none

Required Reading –The Substance of Civilization by Stephen L. Sass, ISBN-13: 9781559704731. Additional readings and course materials will be provided On-Line throughout the semester. The class has a very comprehensive Canvas website.

Course Objectives

This course will introduce students to how new materials impacted social structure both historically and in the present day, and to the social and cultural forces that shape the development and use of materials and technologies from the past to future. To do this, this course will:

- Examine the interrelated nature of society and materials engineering
- Demonstrate how materials can be manipulated to solve technical and sociocultural problems
- Explore how social and cultural systems shape how humans perceive the intrinsic physical properties of materials
- Discuss how the impact of materials on society varies with the cultural and historical context.
- Give students a variety of approaches from the humanities, social sciences, and sciences to examine and shape the impact of materials on society.
- Teach students basic skills in cross-disciplinary communication, team work, and argumentative writing.
- Teach critical thinking about how disciplinary approaches and personal beliefs shape our understanding of materials.
- Teach creative thinking about how to apply this knowledge through applied projects discussing future materials innovations.

Course Outline

This course serves as a test bed for the development of a new course at universities and colleges around the country. Each week of the course will focus on a particular class of materials. The first two days of each week will examine the discovery of a particular material, its physical properties, and historical case studies of its major social impacts. In preparation for the third class meeting each week, we will watch a short video lecture on modern materials developed by scientists from around the U.S. The third class meeting will feature an in-class group activity to discover the possible social impacts of these future materials. A schedule of topics will be provided in the course notes.

Attendance and Expectations - All students are expected to attend and participate in class. The class is taught in an interactive lecture format, and includes discussion and practice activities. Cell phones should be turned off in class. Reading of newspapers, work on assignments for this or other classes, or other activities that are not part of the class are not allowed during class time.
